We have two amazing speakers joining us in October and you don't want to miss this topic. What does damage to the frontal lobes look like? Dr. Cisneros, a clinical neuropsychologist specializing in brain injuries, will discuss how frontal lobe damage is the hallmark of TBI. She will review the functions associated with the frontal lobe, and how these are related to behavioral and emotional control and personality change. She will also share with us the issues related to the frequency of depression, anxiety, impulse control, substance use post-TBI, and how TBI is often related to significant difficulties within relationships. Dr. Kaplan, specializing in neuro-rehabilitation will update us some of the advances in technologies in the treatment of TBI.

Objectives of the program: At the end of this presentation, attendees will be able to:

1. Recognize how frontal lobe damage is the hallmark of TBI.
2. Describe the functions associated with the frontal lobe, and how these are related to behavioral and emotional control and personality changes.
3. Identify issues related to the frequency of depression, anxiety, impulse control, and substance use post-TBI.
4. Recognize how TBI is often related to significant difficulties within relationships.
5. Discuss some of the technological advances in the treatment of TBI.
